Abstract

The main objective of this study is to determine the level of awareness and experiences of selected grade 12 students on sexual inquisitiveness. This mix method study was applied in this study specifically, the correlational and phenomenological design. The researchers selected 55 respondents from San Pedro National High School using random sampling technique. An interview guide questions and survey questions were developed and administered to the participants. The result of this study shows that many of the students are curious, aware and experienced on doing sexual activities.
