Abstract

It is clear that every student's decisions are influenced by the parents' decision-making. The students, present career path is a result of those decisions. At this point, the researchers began to investigate the potential effects of parental decision-making on the present career path of the students. Purposive sampling was utilized by the researchers in this qualitative study to compile data from a total of 55 respondents at San Pedro National High School. The researchers created a survey questionnaire to ask participants for the data needed. The study's conclusions showed that parents' choices have a impact on the present career paths that Technical-Vocational Livelihood (TVL) students are currently thinking.
